Developing the Capacity of EERA's Emerging Researchers

by

Dr. Saneeya Qureshi

University of Liverpool

Link Convenor of EERA's ERG

The Emerging Researchers' Group (ERG) is a European research community for Emerging Researchers (including those undertaking a Doctorate). It provides a forum for the dissemination of early career research, offers support and guidance for academic publications and provides a multitude of resources for researchers to engage with EERA's activities. The main strength of the ERG lies in the dedicated space that it offers early career researchers for discussion and collaboration with a global assembly of academics of all career stages.

Various ERG activities challenge participants to reflect on and debate the role of educational research whilst appreciating diversity and providing collaborative research opportunities. ERG activities recognise that emerging researchers are uniquely positioned to discuss and debate topical and thought-provoking research projects and practices.

By participating in ERG activities, emerging researchers engage with world-class educational research and also learn the priorities and developments from notable regional and international researchers and academics.
